

Suspend Sentence On Van Keuren

Saugerties Road Resident Pays $50
Fine—Jail Sentence Suspended
During Good Behavior—His Virtues Extolled by His Attorney.

Oliver Foster, colored, escaped punishment in county court Monday afternoon when District Attorney Traver moved judgment in the case. Foster has made arrangements to make good with the complaining witness and the imposition of sentence was suspended during good behavior and subject to his carrying out his agreement to make restitution to the complaining witness, Mr.

Brown.
William W. Van Keuren of the Sangerites road, who was found guilty of assault, second degree, was in court and received sentence. Before sentence was pronounced by the court, Attorney Floyd W. Powell made a plea for clemency. He asked the court to take in consideration that at the time of the alleged assault the gun was not fired and no one seemed to feel themselves in imminent danger. The defendant, Mr. Van Keuren, had been for years taunted by many people and on the day of the assault he believed that some of the boys had taunted Mr. Van Keuren. Some of the boys were produced on the stand and denied that they had called Mr. Van Keuren names. Mr. Powell said he did not intend to call the boys liars, but he knew that all of the boys who were present at the time had not been produced in court and as Mr. Van Keuren did not know who these boys were he had been unable to produce them himself in court.

Consider Van Keuren's Past Deeds.

Mr. Powell said that for years Mr.

Van Keuren had been taunted. Immediately after the trial of the case a witness for The People, one Chambers, had passed Mr. Van Keuren in the corridor outside the court room.

when complaint was made to the justice of the peace in the town he was told there was no redress.
Still it was easy for anyone to get a warrant for the arrest of Mr. Van Keuren on the slightest pretext.
Mr. Powell spoke of the public good which Mr. Van Keuren had done how he was a contributor to many charities of the city and a friend of the poor, many of whom he had helped. He asked that Mr. Van

His Record as Complainant.
To Mr. Powell's request, District

Attorney Traver replied stating that there was no intent on the part of The People to send the defendant to state prison. It was true that Mr. Van Keuren had had trouble with many, and it was a fact that he had had some trouble with practically everyone who resided in a radius of a mile from his home. As to Van Keuren having no redress when people trespassed or his lack of ability to have justice done, it was a fact that perhaps no other man in the neighborhood had had more people arrested in the past ten years.

Mr. Chambers which was referred to by Mr. Powell was denied by Mr. Traver who stated that as he heard the story, Mr. Van Kerraen threatened to shoot the Chambers dog if it came on his property and

Would Abolish The Grand Jury

Judge Cunningham, following District Attorney's suggestion, should make changes in the Grand Jury system, according to the New York State Bar Association last week. Addressing the existence of a "crime wave" that shows no indication of subsiding, quoting statistics showing that the homicide ratio in the United States is double that of Italy, and nine times that of England, Judge Cunningham urged better moral training in the home and school as a preventive and more certain and swift administration of the law as a deterrent.

"Apprehension," he said, "is the work of the police. It is a little disconcerting to read a press of yesterday that there are 6,000 trials of police officers of this city last year, the force numbering approximately 12,000 men speaking generally, police methods far behind those of the criminal. Some progress has been made, some modern appliances have been adopted, but, on the whole, police protection today is fundamentally what it was in the days of Byrnes."

The first thought of the detective as the stool pigeon or a confession in any of the methods of the state, there is no detective service available at all in most cases. If the criminal can make an immediate getaway, he will not be apprehended. If the case is of sufficient importance to justify the expense, the rural district attorney must resort to the generally un dependable and expensive employment of private detectives.

In that connection, I advance this concrete suggestion, out of my own experience. As district attorney, I utilized for five years the talent I found among the zealous and intelligent young men of the old B. W. S. police. The state troopers are a similar but superior body. They contain the finest detective material in the world. Much of their cost and intelligence is wasted now on trivialities. This is not a criticism but a suggestion. There should be formed a carefully and gradually, a small but exceptional body of police officers which should be encouraged to be the most advanced police methods and who should become known as the most efficient public detective organization in the world, inexorably persistent in the pursuit of the criminal and whose first principle shall be to regard no case as closed until the culprit has been convicted. This force would involve no additional expense to the state and should be at the service of every district attorney in the state outside the larger cities.

As district attorney, I frequently needed skillful detective assistance and expended large sums in the endeavor to secure it from private agencies. A public detective force would be of invaluable service. The most frequent criticism of the law is directed at supposed evils of criminal procedure. Much of this criticism is undeserved but undoubtedly there is room for improvement. My suggestions have been made. I recall them to your attention. They are not original or novel.

"Beyond question, the greatest evil incident to prosecution of crime is that of delay. When I was admitted to the bar twenty-five years ago, the 'law's delays' and the remedies then about to be applied were much discussed. Today, the same criticism is justified. The evil still operates for the protection of the criminal. There can be no improvement in criminal procedure which does not first secure promptness of trial and punishment. Delay dulls the demand for punishment, scatters the witnesses, permits the framed defense and allows the criminal to continue operations. The district attorney and the courts are to blame for delays. Prosecution is of state concern. For convenience it is carried on by the county prosecutor. The state should exercise some supervision over the enforcement of its law. The governor controls the official life of prosecutors at present. They are subject to removal. I suggest some supervising office under the governor, who shall follow the work of criminal prosecution throughout the state, not to relieve local officers of responsibility but to check up on their work for the information of the governor, and the public and whose duty it shall be, in part at least, to observe, require and receive reports regarding the progress of prosecution. At present, a dilatory or negligent district attorney may secure the effectiveness of the law, secure from responsibility except in extraordinary cases where his removal may be sought.

"The grand jury has no advantage commensurate with its disadvantages. Like some other features of our jurisprudence, it was created in more convenient long since gone. In a defense against the aggression of authority, it was invaluable. Today in a democracy, it is expensive, cumbersome and futile. It has been abolished in many states and it ought to go in New York, except possibly in special or extraordinary circumstances."

"If the prosecutor possesses sufficient force and aggressiveness to bring his position, he will usually dominate and control the grand jury, not by rough means, but none the less by suggestion. Only once did a grand jury ever refuse the action of an officer. It refused an indictment in a murder case. The grand jury committee it was at the beginning of their service, which they expected would afford them a month's enjoyment at the county seat. There was much work to be done then for the period when we found them obstinate, we lost no time in announcing that there was no further business, having them called before the court and dismissed with its thanks. The remaining work, of course, was presented to the next grand jury, with the usual and desired result. The district attorney ought to be solely responsible for conditions in his county. The grand jury is of no service to him except to place upon record the prospective witnesses for the defense. It affords no protection to the rights of defendants. Often and notoriously, district attorneys abuse it and hide behind it in procuring indictments, particularly before elections—an abuse of power for which the district attorney ought to be compelled to assume undivided responsibility."

Referring to treatment of convicts, Judge Cunningham said: "Our policy has shifted from that of extreme abandonment of the prisoner to extreme solicitude for him and little concern for society against which he wars. Now even Osborne has become old-fashioned and ultra-conservative. He has been crowded out of the calendar by writers like Darrow and Frank Tannenbaum, to whom the Century magazine owes its pages. Mr. Darrow, without knowing it, is a true marxian. His philosophy is materialistic and materialistic. He denies the right and asserts the utility of punishment of the criminal because he holds him to be wholly blameless. To Mr. Darrow he is a mere chip on a wave—the impotent victim of economic determinism. He has no free will, and cannot resist if he would the inexorable forces which overwhelm him and which alone are responsible for his action. It is interesting to note in the press of yesterday, that a very formidable movement for the abolition of capital punishment in New York, under the aegis of Mr. Darrow and Mr. Laue will be undertaken in a few days. Between the old and the ultra modern conceptions of the relationship of society to the criminal, lies the proper course to follow."

The entire system of sentence suspension and parole must be modified. "Conviction and sentence no longer mean anything certain. It is quite the custom to accept pleas of murder in the second degree in many of the less atrocious first degree cases. The less atrocious is then sentenced to an indeterminate sentence of from twenty years to life, but under no conceivable circumstances, does the sentence mean life, nor is it at all probable that it means twenty years. On the contrary, the twenty-year period is subject to good time allowances and the murderer will be at liberty in about twelve years."

"The suspended sentence, particularly in lower courts, means frequently that the defendant had sufficient personal or political influence to obtain it. If we are to have any central control or supervision of the administration of the criminal law, it would be wise to require every judge or magistrate who suspends sentence to file a public statement with that official of the reasons actuating him in the suspension. In fact, some method should be devised for the supervision of criminal justice in the lower courts. There, influence is most frequently exercised, and there, many of the most flagrant abuses occur, secure from observation of publicity."

"Lastly, the criminal will have no respect for the law or fear of its punishment if he believes it or its instrumentalities, to be devious or corrupt. When I left the pure and unadorned atmosphere of the Shawangunk Mountains and essayed the defense of an important criminal case in this city, I was astonished and dismayed at the atmosphere which pervaded the scene. Everywhere the talk was of corruption and 'fixing.' The defendants were reputed to be affluent. The ugly hints, rumors and efforts at approach were so numerous that counsel for the defense feared to permit the defendants to step into the corridor of the court house alone. I have met few defendants in criminal cases in New York who had the slightest interest in a skillful legitimate defense, or in a lawyer whose talents were limited to such a defense. They are interested only in influence, political or personal, and the control, real or supposed, to be exercised by this or that individual over the conduct of public officials. The average criminal defendant refuses to believe in the good faith of prosecution. He believes that he can always 'beat the case' if the appropriate means are used. Without saying more, it may be said that some lawyers and some officials are responsible for his belief. It is the duty of the bar to raise the standard of criminal practice, to drive from the courts those practitioners at the criminal bar whose methods menace its reputation and effectiveness."

"In the last analysis the solution of the problem rests entirely upon sound public opinion. If the public is lethargic or public opinion is absurdly sentimental, present conditions will continue or grow worse and the administration of the criminal law will be ineffective and ridiculous. If the public demands protection from the criminal and a firm administration of justice, they will come. Public opinion is responsible for existing evils; public opinion can rectify them speedily. For it is true, that in this, as in all other matters of American government, the people do rule."

SHOOTING OF HUGE WHITE GOOSE ENDS ROMANCE OF AIR

Death Is Final Chapter of "Canadian Beauty's" Love for "Snow King"

Parsons, Kan.—When a mammoth white Canadian snow goose was shot at the island in a pond of the Neosho, it terminated what is believed to have been a love story in birddom.

Hunters of the community believe that the death of the goose was the final chapter in a tragic story of bravery, noble leadership, lasting love and fidelity—the sequel to a tragedy enacted two years ago that was marked by news stories and editorials throughout the land.

That was the awful death of Snow King, as dubbed by his slayer, who had stalked the bird for three years as he made his southward flight dauntlessly leading a flock of brown geese. Majestically the great bird soared over the river and field where his hunter lay, cleverly keeping his distance. But finally man's carefully laid plans were fruitful. Disguised as a cow, with belt hung around his neck and gun holding the tail in proper position, he deceived the goose when it stopped to feed in a cow pasture. And Snow King fell.

White Goose Seen.
At intervals since Snow King's death a great white goose had been noticed about the scene of the tragedy. Farmers talked of its beauty; hunters coveted it—but it always eluded them. It always returned, however, to the scene of Snow King's last stand. It is believed the bird would join different flocks, for it was seen to arrive with one bunch and then another, but always remaining after the others moved on southward.

Sentiment of the community, mixed with bits of outdoor lore, have woven a pretty story about this second bird, which has been called Canadian Beauty.

One hunter recalled having wounded a goose and of keeping it in camp. Its wild mate called and called for it and finally ventured into camp rather than be separated from its mate. Another added that when a goose mates it mates for life; that if it loses its mate it will not stay long with any flock and will fly and swim and feed alone.

Mourn for Canadian Beauty.
And so they wonder if Canadian Beauty was the mate of Snow King. They wonder if she went a little while with the flock of brown geese two years ago, and, missing Snow King, returned to the scene of his disappearance in vain search for him. They wonder if discouragement prompted her to join other flocks, only to leave them and return to the place where her lost mate was last seen.

The youngsters, hearing of the double tragedy, stood in front of the window where Canadian Beauty hung for a while, marveling at the six feet nine inches of her wing spread, their attitudes as expressive as if in the presence of honored dead.

Carved Apple and Leaf His Monument to Eve

Greenville, S. C.—Robert Quillen, humorist and author, has erected a monument in his front yard to Eve, the first woman, and his townpeople are horrified. In an editorial in his own paper, answering the criticism of the neighbors, he said:

"Eve was a distant relative of mine on my mother's side. The family has always been proud of her. She was the first lady of the land, and the religious beauty of her time."

Beneath the inscription "In Memory of Eve, the First Woman," is a nicely carved apple with a leaf and one leaf.

Oyster Is Eaten by Fish It Swallowed

Dover, Del.—A fish that ate an oyster which swallowed it was found in the shell of the oyster by Mrs. I. Paul Jones while she was preparing a meal. The fish, which was two inches long, was found inside the shell, but no oyster was there. So Mrs. Jones concluded that the fish had eaten the oyster after it was drawn into the shell. The fish was alive when the shell was opened.

SLEUTHS MYSTIFIED BY VENTRILOQUIST

French Youth Is Clever at "Throwing Voice."

Paris.—Making use of his powers as a ventriloquist, Jean Durray of Rouen, near Paris, France, for ten days mystified the gendarmes of his native village and detectives from Paris.

Jean invented a ghost to haunt his mother's humble cottage. It talked, rapped on the walls, clanked chains, sang rude songs, and generally conducted itself in a turbulent manner. Paris finally was asked to send her detectives to lay the ghost. They solemnly endeavored to put questions to the supernatural visitor.

They were dazed to receive answers, some pertinent, but the majority impertinent. It was a patriotic ghost, too, and every time an army officer appeared it would sing the Marseillaise.

The ghostly visitation remained a deep mystery until one unusually observant policeman discovered that when Jean was absent the ghost was silent. A strenuous third degree wormed the secret from the youth.

Children Save Old Man From Death in Marsh

New York.—Several children playing near the foot of Seventh avenue, Brooklyn, saw the bent figure of a man 200 feet out in the mud and water of the Dyker meadow marsh that stretches toward Gravesend bay. He had sunk to his knees in the swamp and thrashed about feebly in futile efforts to free himself.

The children summoned two soldiers from Fort Hamilton. The latter donned hip boots and, with the help of Michael Garzini, a park foreman, rescued the spent and dazed swamp victim. At the Fort Hamilton police station the man said he had been imprisoned in the marsh all night.

He said he was Carlo Valentino, sixty-eight, of No. 400 Carlton avenue, Brooklyn. He was soaked to the skin through his thin garments, which clung tightly to his weak and emaciated body. He said he could not remember when he had eaten last, but he recalled wandering into the marsh.

Man Strangled to Death With Chair at Throat

Bridgeport, Conn.—William Kunst, seventy-five years old, died as a result of the action of his daughter, Mrs. Charles King, Dr. H. L. De Luca testified here at a coroner's inquest. Doctor De Luca is the medical examiner here.

Kunst died of strangulation, De Luca told the court. Mrs. King, in tears, illustrated the manner in which she held a kitchen chair against her aged father's throat while her husband, who is forty-five, lay on the floor and held the older man down with an arm flung across his abdomen. This was in the course of a family quarrel in which blows were exchanged.

"I held the chair down on father's head, but I didn't press very hard," Mrs. King sobbed.

King is held on a technical charge of murder.

Plan More Power At Niagara Falls

State Water Power Commission Program Includes a Projected Hydro-Electric Development of Two Million Horsepower.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 26.—A projected hydro-electric development of 2,000,000 horsepower, largely on the Niagara and St. Lawrence rivers and the barge canal, is embraced in the program of the state water power commission which today filed its annual report with the legislature.

The consummation of the plans made by the commission will place the state "in the forefront as a producer of electrical energy," the report said.

While the commission is planning the development of more power at Niagara Falls, the report says, the amount of water used would not detract in any way the scenic beauty of the falls.

The commission said it would recommend a new treaty between the United States and Canada which would sanction the use of additional water on the American side for power purposes.

"The present electrical requirements of the state," said the report, "calls for the production of over 5,000,000 horsepower per year, of which nearly 2,000,000 horsepower is now produced by water power. With the demand for current increasing at an astounding rate the commission felt that it was high time to end the discussion of water power theories that has marked the past 20 years and substitute a plan of action that will promptly give the people of the state the benefits resulting from the full development of cheaper hydro-electric power."

Regarding the additional power to be developed at Niagara Falls, the report said:

"Here is 'white coal' that will go far towards cutting down the yearly consumption of 20,000,000 tons of real coal now being burned to produce electricity which could be developed by water power."

The report showed the state now is receiving $164,000 a year for the use of surplus waters on the barge canal for which it formerly got about $5,000 a year.

"Granadier"

A granadier was originally a soldier whose special duty it was to throw hand grenades. Granade is from the French word for the eastern fruit, pomegranate, the small silver ball explosive called granade being like the fruit in shape. Handgrenades were used in the war in the sixteenth century, but the word granade was also from the first used to imply an explosive shell fired from a gun. These weapons were employed after 1800 by special troops called granadiers. They became obsolete in the nineteenth century, but the Japanese returned to their use in the siege of Port Arthur in 1904. They contained high explosives and were found to be effective. They were also used in the trench warfare in northern France in the World war, but were generally called trench bombs.

Sincerity

The power of sincerity is essentially the same as the disconcerting quality of sincerity which through face as face with false pretensions. The rest of us are consequently spending all our energies in the attempt to find ourselves, and finding that yesterday we were a part, but the person in the act had arrived at the point of sincerity and where tomorrow lies on his yesterday. Sincerity is that which clothes only the alters of sincerity. In literature it is the power of finding one's own voice in the pen—John Estlin, in "Anglo-American Essays."

Couldn't Really Call Inn Ancient Building

We had paddled through Ghent's complex waterways and were wondering where we could leave our canoe in safety, when some racing shells shot past, a boathouse pennant fluttered, and a cheery voice invited us to utilize the Royal Club Nautique for as long as we wished. So we stored our canoe in the club's "garage," then drove through the town to a quaint inn whose leaded panes looked out upon a row of shops built into the outer walls of a great Gothic church. Melville Chater writes in the National Geographic Magazine.

The sight of people flocking to service, while others slipped drinks, got shaved or bought curios, all under the eaves of a sacred edifice, hinted that we were in an ancient quarter of the town.

"Is this an old inn?" we inquired of our Flemish host. He was a singularly literal man. He replied gravely: "Not so very. Probably when built in the thirteenth century it was some wealthy man's home. In the sixteenth century, about the time Albrecht Durer stopped here, it was the house of the Grocers' guild. Later it was privately owned for a couple of more centuries. No, as an inn I wouldn't call it particularly old."

Funny Ambitions

The question in an English periodical, "What would you like to be?" brought out many clever and amusing answers. Here are a few of them: The sun, because it is always sure of a rise. The letter "I," for then I should always be in the midst of comfort. A shoeblick, because I should be continually shining before my fellows. A man of forty with the wisdom of sixty, to make life worth living. A billiard ball, frequently kissed, carefully stored when necessary, and not out of pocket even when in a hole. —Boston Transcript.

Well Founded

In the days of the old Chippie Creek a mining camp justice, when finding the dead corpse of the camp hanging by the neck from a cottonwood, with his hands tied behind him, a sign on his forehead and $25.00 in the other, reached this decision: "If the cat knew itself, and the cat didn't do it, allow this poor man come to death from some unknown cause at the hands of persons unknown to the cat, and the cat has the corpse $25.00 for carrying concealed weapons." —Essex's Magazine.

New Record for Ruth Unlikely

Babe Says Only Chances of Him Beating His Home Run Record Are to Pitch Soft Balls or Trade Him to National League.

New York, Jan. 26.—Babe Ruth tacitly conceded today that he entertained slight hope of ever again trifling with home run records as he did in those halcyon days of 1925 and 1921.

It isn't that our Mr. Ruth is lacking in physical condition. He has been trained within a pound of perfection. It isn't that he figures opposing pitchers are getting too good. They couldn't have been worse during the last two seasons. As for home run, he smote eleven in one week on the training trip last year before his illness, and, later in the season, turned in a total of 25 over a stretch of 98 games in spite of suspensions and physical disability.

There is, in fact, only one of two methods by which he can hope to beat his major league record of 59, according to the great man's personal viewpoint. Either pitch him soft balls or trade him to the National League.

"I nearly wept when we moved out of the Polo Grounds," Ruth said today, an appropriately lugubrious expression on his noble pan. "Home runs, they were a joke. Do you know that I used to take my bat in one hand and hit ten or twelve into the upper tier in right field every morning? That's how easy it was. Now, with the new stands erected in all parts of the Polo Grounds outfield, I don't see how those fellows can miss. Left and center fields are almost as easy as right field.

"Before we went to our own field, I had 77 days a season for shooting at those stands. Now I have the same number of days on a field that is almost as big as Central Park. And nearly every field in the American League is a big one. There are only two or three in the National League that compare with those in our league. Without those right field stands at the Polo Grounds, I'll have to be a whole lot better man than I was in 1921 to beat my record now.

George, however, means to give the proposition the good old college try. In St. Petersburg he will play thirty-six holes of golf each day until the rest of the ball club reports. After that, his future is his own to make or break.

"All I'll have to do is get the old eye trained," he said. "Everything else is set for the comeback."

Trainer Scrimin-Hill, New York, Jan. 26.—William Duke, trainer for the racing stable of Gifford A. Cochran, was reported as seriously ill today at his home at Wellsville, N. Y. He was said to be suffering from pneumonia.

The trainer was one of the leading figures of the French turf for years as stable manager and trainer for William K. Vanderbilt and Aga Kahn.

Vance of Brooklyn Club Has Remarkable Record

In the last 15 years only a few pitchers in major league baseball put over big strikeout records for a single game of nine innings. Walter Johnson twice had 14; Jim Scott, with the White Sox, in 1915, fanned 15; Joe Bush, then with the Boston Red Sox, set down 13 of the Detroit team; "Rube" Marquard of the Giants, in 1911 fanned 14; Arthur Vance of the Brooklyn club, in 1923 struck out 15, and in 1924 he had 14 and 15 strikeouts in regulation games, in 1925 he fanned 13 and 17, the latter mark requiring 10 innings. Prior to 1911, there were 100 records which equaled or surpassed these. However, the work of Vance is remarkable for this period for the average pitcher rarely gets the double number in strikeouts.

Paul Berlenbach Plans to Become Heavyweight

Difficulty in making the 175-pound weight limit of his division and aspirations to succeed to the heavyweight crown, now held by Jack Dempsey, may shortly compel Paul Berlenbach to relinquish his world's light-heavyweight championship, declares Dan Hickey, his manager.

Berlenbach, who made his heavyweight bow several months ago by knocking out King Solomon of Panama, already is planning an active heavyweight campaign, Hickey, admitted.

Before leaving the light-heavyweight field, however, Berlenbach will give Harry Greb, world's middleweight champion, the next chance at his title.

Grange's Move a Menace to Sport, Says Wilce

Harold (Red) Grange's example in leaving college to become a professional football player may become a menace to the college sport, Dr. J. W. Wilce, head football coach of Ohio State university, declared in an address at Cleveland.

Doctor Wilce did not mention Grange by name. Replying to a question as to his opinion regarding the grad star, he said:

"Heretofore professional football players have played square in not seeking to recruit college players. I fear there may be a large number of men who will be easily persuaded to go into professional teams for the money they can make."
